THE SCALPEL SPEAKS

*This very moment,
As my sharp metallic edge Cuts,
The shrunken distant skin of the cadaver, with no eyes, I can feel your cold hands shivering in nervousness and horror, after years of being used for,
by rookies and old-hands,*

*More than your fears, I feel the pain of this cadaver when handled with laxness
By those, who wear white loyalty on them,*

*I hear the stories behind their stillness
Some who had no choice, some who choose dissection as their destiny
A donation of greatness to science,*

when handled with love and care I also listen to their silent joy in a room of giggles and shrieks, For they know, the dead teach the living.
